

The long-term care misconceptions

Talking with your family today can help you feel confident about your future tomorrow.

A recent study conducted by Lincoln Financial* found that many are confused about long-term care.

96% of Americans surveyed believe long-term care planning is an important component of retirement planning.*

However, few are addressing the need. Only half of spouses surveyed have talked about long-term care needs, and far fewer people have discussed it with parents or children.*

MISCONCEPTION: "It won't happen to me."

Reality: People tend to unrealistically downplay their personal risk.

54% of those surveyed expect a parent to need long-term care.*

37% of those surveyed expect their spouse to need long-term care.*

32% of those surveyed expect themselves to need long-term care.*

MISCONCEPTION: "That's what my savings are for."

Reality: People underestimate the costs of long-term care.

An unplanned care event may drain savings two times faster than anticipated.*

Most of those surveyed guess that a private room in a nursing home costs less than half the realistic estimate.*

MISCONCEPTION: "Medicare or medicaid have me covered."

Reality: Medicare and Medicaid coverage is restricted.

Medicare will likely be insufficient and Medicaid does not account for your choices or preferences.

66% of those surveyed who anticipate having to pay for long-term care assistance say they will rely on Medicare, health insurance, or Medicaid.*

MISCONCEPTION: "My family will be able to take care of me."

Reality: Caregiving negatively impacts women in the family.

Those caring for ill parents are twice as likely to experience depression or anxiety.

94% of those surveyed believe a long-term care plan would make things easier on adult children.*

78% of those surveyed worry that they would not be able to provide adequate care if somebody in their family needed it.*

More than 7 in 10 women surveyed believe that if somebody in their family needed long-term care, the responsibility of caregiving will fall on them.*
